

Our doctors may refer you and your pet to an emergency veterinary hospital if immediate medical care is needed. We have provided you with information on the emergency hospitals we refer to when our hospital is closed.

Keep the numbers of each emergency hospital on the refrigerator or in the folder we have provided.

A test drive to the emergency hospital is a good idea to make sure you can find it at night under stressful circumstances.

We recommend you call us first in all cases of emergency. However, this brochure contains information for your reference in case a trip for emergency treatment is necessary. In this case, please call the emergency hospital before arriving to provide as much information as possible about your pet's condition so they can prepare for your arrival.

The National Capitol Poison Control Center (D.C.) will try to respond to questions regarding animal poisoning. Phone consultations are free of charge.

202-625-3333

Animal Poison Control will charge for a phone consultation for both clients and hospital.
